

After graduating from high school in 1976, company founder, David Allard started working out of a fieldstone house he was building for his parents, making custom cabinets and furniture.

David constructed his first woodworking shop from timber he cut off the family farm in Lyndon, Vermont and had milled locally. Over the years seven additions were made to the original building and two more factories added, bringing the total production space to over 140,000 square feet and employing over 100 craftspeople.

In 2000 David was recognized as the Vermont Small Business Person of the Year, an honor which he says belongs as much to his employees as to himself.

HOMESTEAD

RECLAIMED FURNITURE

The desire to salvage our country's history and resources and preserve both to inhabit today's homes gave rise to our Homestead line of reclaimed lumber furniture. As beautiful and historic factories, homes and barns are torn down, the useable timbers are saved, the defects removed, then re-sawn and kiln-dried.

Handcrafting this beautiful lumber into our Homestead furniture pays fitting tribute to America's heritage and virgin forests.
